

For a high-ticket service, more sections rarely increase conversions. They usually create more opportunities for the visitor to leave.

Your goal is not to answer every question. Your goal is to get the right doctor to think:

"This is exactly what I've been looking for."

Then they book a call.

I'd reduce it to 5 sections.

---

1. Hero (80% of the page's importance)

This is where you win or lose.

Headline

Become the Doctor Patients Think of First.

Subheadline

We help busy doctors build a trusted online presence without spending hours creating content—so you stay focused on your patients while your reputation keeps growing.

Buttons

- Apply for a Strategy Call
- Watch 60-Second Demo

Immediately below:

Large demo video

---

2. The Problem

One short paragraph.

Headline

Great Doctors Don't Always Get Chosen.

Text

Every day, patients compare doctors online before booking. If they don't see you, they'll remember someone else. The challenge isn't your expertise—it's staying visible when you're busy treating patients.

Then one simple visual.

Instead of icons...

Show

Invisible Doctor → Trusted Doctor

---

3. The Solution

Not features.

Not AI.

Transformation.

Headline

Your Reputation Should Work While You Do.

Four short cards.

- ✓ Stay Visible
- ✓ Build Trust
- ✓ Save Time
- ✓ Become the Go-To Doctor

Each one only one sentence.

---

4. How It Works

Only three steps.

1. We learn your expertise.
2. We build your authority system.
3. Your content keeps educating patients while you focus on your practice.

One tiny sentence underneath.

Powered by advanced AI built around your expertise.

That's enough.

5. Final CTA

Large.

Simple.

Headline

Ready to Become the Doctor Patients Remember?

Button

Apply for a Strategy Call

Then the qualification form directly underneath.

No footer.

No navigation.

No extra links.

No pricing.

No services.

No testimonials (unless they're exceptional).

No blog.

Nothing.

---

Even better...

I would steal one idea from Hormozi.

Instead of making it feel like a website...

Make it feel like a high-ticket application page.

Imagine this flow:

Headline

Video

Problem

Solution

Apply

That's it.

People can finish the entire page in under 90 seconds.

---

One thing I would absolutely add

A single sentence near the top:

Trusted by clinic doctors who want to become the first name patients think of.

Or, if you have results:

Helping doctors turn expertise into reputation—without adding more work to their schedule.

It immediately frames your business around the outcome rather than the technology.

If I were optimizing this for conversions

I would aim for a page that's 60–70% shorter than a typical agency landing page. The more premium your service is, the less your page should feel like it's trying to convince people. Give them one compelling promise, one clear demonstration (your video), and one obvious next step. That's often all you need for qualified prospects.
